

Low-income housing projects have lagged for more than a year amid funding freeze

Since funding was frozen for the low-income housing tax credit program in December 2017, Missouri's new low-income housing projects have been cut by one-third. The developments would have normally been approved by the Missouri Housing Development Commission.

Housing approvals since funding freeze

